Biographical Note

Weaving together several of the strands of San Antonio society, members of the Cassiano and Pérez families included descendants of the founding families of the community and immigrants to Texas from a variety of backgrounds. The progenitor of the Cassiano name was born Giuseppe Cassini in San Remo, Italy about 1791. Reputedly a trained seaman, he came to America as a young man, establishing himself as a merchant in New Orleans. He relocated to San Antonio in the 1820s, where he operated a store and traded extensively in land. In the move, his name was Hispanicized to José Cassiano, though he and his family occasionally used the Cassini name, particularly in business dealings outside of Texas.

The Cassiano store provided supplies to Texan forces during the Texas Revolution, and Cassiano was active in San Antonio government after independence, serving as a city alderman in the 1830s and 1840s. Cassiano married four times after moving to Texas, each time to a member of an established local family. After the death of his first wife, Josefa Menchaca, he married the widow of the governor of Texas, Gertrudis Pérez de Cordero, with whom he had one son, José Ygnacio Cassiano. After his second wife's death in 1832, Cassiano married Margarita Valdez, and had two more children, José Fermin Cassiano and Isabel Cassiano. Widowed again in 1841, Cassiano married Trinidad Soto, from whom he separated shortly after their union.

José Cassiano's business success and his ties to local families helped him amass a sizeable estate at the time of his death in 1862, and he left a considerable amount of land and personal property to his children. One of his largest holdings was the San Bartolo Ranch, between the San Antonio River and Cibolo Creek, originally granted to the Hernández and Menchaca families. Family connections probably aided in his control of this large tract, as Cassiano's second wife, Gertrudis Pérez de Cordero was a Hernández descendant, while his daughter-in-law, Tomasa Flores de Cassiano, was also related to the original property owners. Cassiano's sons, in particular José Fermin Cassiano, were involved in their father's business, and continued to buy and sell real estate in the San Antonio area. Married to Tomasa Flores in 1857, José Fermin was likewise active in civic life. They had three daughters and a son; the youngest daughter, Teresa Cassiano, married Antonio R. Péres, a veteran of Confederate service. They became the parents of ten children, most of them remaining part of a tight-knit family circle in San Antonio. Among the children were Esther Pérez Carvajal, an educator and clubwoman, and Marguerite Pérez, also a teacher in San Antonio schools.

Scope and Content Note

Business and personal papers generated and acquired by members of the Cassiano and Pérez families provide a record of activity in San Antonio that stretches over several generations.

The papers are organized into five subgroups, based on the family or individual associated with their creation. These are:

Cassiano family papers, which gathers the earliest papers, and is primarily associated with José Cassiano, José Fermin Cassiano and other members of the immediate family;

Paschal Leo Buquor papers, a small amount of business, military and personal items of the San Antonio and Floresville resident, probably a business associate of the Cassiano family;

Pérez family papers, material related to Antonio R. and Teresa Cassiano Pérez, their children and grandchildren;

General family papers, primarily later genealogical material, literary works, and printed material that are not identifiable as related to a specific individual, along with all family photographs;

Palfrey family papers, a small group of financial records associated with an unrelated San Antonio family.

Some of the series/subseries organization and content within these subgroups is detailed in the following outline:

LAND AND PROPERTY DOCUMENTS

Organized into subseries by type of document and subject matter. An extensive body of material, found here are items that were generated by family involvement in land matters and documents probably acquired in connection with land-related activities. These include land grant documents from the Spanish, Mexican, Republic of Texas, and state of Texas periods, deeds and other transactions. There is some overlap in this series with the third subgroup, the Pérez family papers, in transactions involving both the Cassiano family and Antonio R. Pérez. Grouped together are a number of documents related to a particular tract of land, the San Bartolo ranch originally granted to the Hernández and Menchaca families. Records of the acquisition, management and sale of this large tract date from the 1740s through the 1850s and include some of the original title documents along with documents intended to prove ownership of the property.

III. Pérez family papers

Organized into series by family member, beginning with Antonio R. Pérez and Teresa Cassiano de Pérez and including most of their children and some grandchildren. Much of this material consists of a miscellany of letters, land records, financial documents, and printed items. The greatest amount of material is associated with Esther Pérez Carvajal, and gathers some correspondence, land and legal documents, estate records, organization records and some writings. Also fairly extensive are the papers of Marguerite T. C. Pérez. The papers of Robert A. Pérez are limited but for a collection of 121 notebooks containing technical notes from his work with engineers/surveyors Alexander Walton and Edwin P. Arneson. The notebooks cover a range of projects, from land subdivisions to road and irrigation projects. This series also includes some land records for properties associated with several family members.

IV. General family papers

Organized by type of material, this subgroup gathers family items that could not be identified with a particular individual, as well as all items in some formats, such as books and pamphlets and photographs. Genealogical material consists of notes and transcripts and copies of family related-documents. Manuscripts are generally brief works on historical subjects. A notable item in this series is a manuscript version of the Los Pastores Christmas play, probably dating from the early 1900s. Books are mostly religious works from a wide range of dates (some Texas-related books have been separated to the main library collection). All photographs are described in this subgroup, and include images of the Cassiano, Pérez, and related families, as well as unrelated individuals and some views of places and objects. A number of items are unidentified, and some identification of individuals is tentative, based on comparison with known images.
